We have designed and fabricated a capacitive microelectromechanical system-based device using gold-coated silicon and glass substrates, which is intended for use as an optical chemical sensor. This device consists of a three-terminal surface-gate electrode, a resonant beam, and a light-guiding capillary channel. The device geometry is implemented using the planar batch microfabrication techniques. The resonator beam was designed and modeled based on the electrostatic forces under ambient conditions. The fabrication procedure included the reactive ion etching of a silicon wafer, deposition of a gold-coated silicon layer, and selective removal of the unwanted silica layer. The experimental setup was optimized for optical sensing using two different light sources: a He-Ne laser and a red light-emitting diode. This device is able to measure the apparent absorption of the light beams through the substrate used as a fluid-contacting layer and to report the result in real-time. This device can potentially be applied to chemical sensing of liquid and gas samples. We also discuss the calibration, signal-to-noise ratio analysis, and limit of detection for this device.Together Always (album) Together Always is a collaborative studio album by American rappers and producers Ka$, Jay Rock, and J.
